Aida, slave of Amneris and daughter of the Ethiopian King Amonasro

Amneris, daughter of the Pharaoh

Amonasro, King of Ethiopia, Aida's father

Synopsis:

Act One. The Ethiopians are threatening to invade Egypt. The High Priest Ramphis announces that the Gods have chosen the warrior, who is going to lead the Egyptian army against the invaders. Radamès hopes to be chosen to dedicate his triumph to his beloved Aida. Amneris appears on the scene followed by Aida and secretly fears that her slave returns Radamès' love. Aida is divided between her love for him and that for her father Amonasro and her people. Radamès is officially entitled as head of the Egyptian army with a sacred ceremony at the Volcano's temple.

Act two. Amneris swears vengeance against Aida, once she discovers that her slave is truly in love with Radamès. In the meanwhile the Egyptians celebrate Radamès' victory over the Ethiopians. As commander of the Egyptian troops he expresses his wish to intercede in favour of the prisoners, among whom there is also Amonasro, Aida's father. But the priests do not agree and the Pharaoh decides to set free all the prisoners except Aida and Amonasro. As reward for his victory Radamès is conferred the hand of Amneris.

Act three. While Amneris is praying in the temple of Isis for her imminent and desired wedding, Amonasro tries to persuade his daughter to take advantage of Radamès' love for her and to discover the route the Egyptian forces will use to invade Ethiopia. Aida decides in the end to surrender to her father's request and let Amonasro hear not seen her speech with Radamès. When the captain reveals the military secret, Amonasro appears from his hiding place. Radamès realizes he has betrayed unaware his homeland and decides to atone for his betrayal by allowing himself to be taken prisoner.

Act four. Radamès is visited by Amneris: he should forget Aida in exchange of his freedom. But he refuses to accept and is ready to face his destiny: he will be buried alive under the altar of the god Volcano. When he arrives at the sepulchre and a big stone is put to cover the entrance, Radamès realizes he is not alone: Aida is concealed in the chamber and is ready to die with her beloved, while Amneris above them in the temple is mourning Radamès' death.
